

few 'literals', and I was regretting my confident assertion that no author could be trusted to correct his own proofs perfectly, before I came across the first unmarked error after, perhaps some twenty galleys. There were half a dozen or so more before the end. He was at first incredulous; then generously grateful. If these had been someone else's proofs he would not have missed a thing.

G S L TUCKER'S BIBLIOGRAPHY

BY COURTESY OF

N G BUTLIN

'The Origin of Ricardo's Theory of Profits', Economica (NS), XXI (1954), 320-33.

Progress and Profits in British Economic Thought, 1650-1850, (Cambridge University Press, 1960).

'Ricardo and Marx', Economica (NS), XXVIII (1961), 252-69.

'English Pre-Industrial Population Trends', The Economic History Review, 2nd ser. XVI (1963), 205-18.

'Population in History', Essays in Bibliography and Criticism, LIII, The Economic History Review, 2nd ser. XX (1967), 131-40.

'Irish Fertility Ratios before the Famine', The Economic History Review, 2nd ser. XXIII (1970), 267-84.

'The Application and Significance of Theories of the Effect of Economic Progress on the Rate of Profit, 1800-1850', (reprint), in A G L Shaw (ed.), Great Britain and the Colonies (Methuen, London, 1970), 132-41.

Economic Opportunity and White American Fertility Ratios, 1800-1860, (with Colin Forster) (Yale University Press, New Haven and London, 1972). (Yale Series in Economic History).

'A Note on the Reliability of Fertility Ratios', Australian Economic History Review, XIV, 1974, 160-167.

'The Old Poor Law Revisited', Explorations in Economic History, 12, 1975, 233-52.

Introduction (pp101) and Index (pp36) to William Huskisson, Essays on Political Economy (1830), Facsimile Reprint, Department of Economic History, Faculty of Economics, Australian National University, 1976.

'The Political Economy of William Huskisson', 1978 Newcastle Lecture in Political Economy, The University of Newcastle, 1978, Pp 30.

'The Political Economy of an Anonymous Critic of Malthus' View on the Necessity of Unproductive Consumption', Australian Economic History Review, XVIII (September 1978), 119-40.